DAMAGED JAPANESE BATTLESHIPS, AIRCRAFT CARRIERS, CRUISERS AND TRANSPORTS QUIT MIDWAY ISLAND AREA

"The Enemy Appears To Be Withdrawing But We Are Continuing the Battle," Declares Admiral Nimitz — Major Japanese Fleet Was Involved, and Troop-Laden Transports—Invasion Attempt Beaten Off.

(By International News Service)

HONOLULU, June 6—Heavily damaged Japanese battleships, aircraft carriers, cruisers and transports withdrew from the vicinity of Midway Island today, but American bombers and fleet units kept up a relentless pursuit.

"The enemy appears to be withdrawing, but we are continuing the battle," declared Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Fleet.

As additional information came in about the battle which began Thursday when the Japs launched a large-scale assault against Midway, 1,149 miles northwest of Pearl Harbor, it began to appear that the enemy had sustained a defeat of major magnitude.

Admiral Nimitz's communique No. 2 was cautious but optimistic in tone.

The language of the communique made it clear that a major Japanese battle fleet was involved and revealed for the first time that troop-laden transports were along, presumably for the purpose of occupying Midway after the attack.

This invasion attempt appeared indefinitely to have been beaten off.

Some informed quarters in Honolulu declared that the Japs had planned to invade one or more of the Hawaiian Islands after knocking out Midway.

American Army, Navy and Marine Corps planes, aided by a comparatively small U. S. naval force, were credited semi-officially with beating back the attack.

Prospects that the Midway action which started early Thursday when Jap planes attacked the American outpost may result in an important naval victory were strongly hinted throughout Honolulu following analysis of Communique No. 2 issued by Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet.

Although Admiral Nimitz announced that air forces of all services had borne the brunt of the attack which has sent the enemy fleeing in retreat, unofficial reports maintained that the U. S. naval force was a major element in dealing the heavy blow to Japan's naval power.

Admiral Nimitz revealed that several Japanese ships in all categories—battleships, aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers and troop-laden transports—had been seriously damaged.

Some reports said that the thousands of Japanese troops aboard the transports undoubtedly had intended to attempt a landing on Midway, 1,149 miles northwest of Honolulu, and possibly planned an invasion of Hawaii.

Unofficially it was said that combined air units of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, co-operating magnificently, poured down heavy death-dealing destruction on the enemy armada before United States naval vessels engaged the Japanese fleet.

WASHINGTON CROSSING'S HISTORY IS PRESENTED

Mrs. L. J. Hutton, a Member of The Park Commission, Speaks Here

PICTURES OF FLOWERS

Mrs. L. J. Hutton, of Edgely, a member of the Washington Crossing Park Commission, in addressing members and friends of the Garden Section of The Travel Club yesterday afternoon, told much of interest in regard to the Park and its significance.

Mrs. Hutton, the former Ann Hawkes, gave a comprehensive outline of the historical background of the park which is cherished not only by Bucks Countians, but by lovers of history throughout the nation.

Stating that "Washington Crossing deserves more of our interest than it has," Mrs. Hutton noted the similarity of the times leading up to the historic crossing of the Delaware by Washington just before his capture of Trenton, and the present period.

Taking the women gathered in the club home back in fancy to the bleak fall of 1776, she told that at that period the American Revolution was at a low ebb, with enthusiasm for the war, especially among the well-to-do land-holders of the country, being practically nil. "They were satisfied with their lot, and with British rule," Mrs. Hutton then considered the strategy of Washington in buying up all the boats on the Delaware River, craft of every type, to prevent the enemy from using them. The unusual manner in which the soldiers of Washington's army crossed the river on that first historic occasion, from the New Jersey side into Pennsylvania, was well portrayed in words, with some of the even larger boats being manned by but two men, so small was the band of patriots. GOODWILL RESCUE SQUAD RECOVERS DROWNED BOY'S BODY

Harry Van Spreewenburg, of Falls Township, Drowns in Abandoned Sand Pit

VICTIM 10 YEARS OLD

Goodwill Crew Was Answering Its First Call for Drowning Case

Rescue squads, last night, responded to a call from Fallington to endeavor to recover the body of a ten-year-old boy who had drowned while swimming in a lake near Penn Valley and adjacent to West Morrisville.

The little victim was Harry Van Spreewenburg, Tyburn Road, Falls Township.

The Bristol Blood Donors, Bucks County Rescue Squad, Goodwill Fire Company Rescue Squad, Bristol; Union Fire Co., of Morrisville, rushed to the scene and dragged the artificial lake created by an abandoned sand pit, for nearly four hours before the body was brought to the surface.

The body was recovered by the Goodwill Squad at about 7:45 and it was stated that the lad drowned at about four o'clock.

In the Goodwill boat when the body was recovered were Lester and Clifford Grimes, of Bristol.

Bringing the body to the shore members of the Bucks County Rescue Squad and Bristol Blood Donors worked over it for more than an hour in an effort to revive the boy.

Private Theodore Jones, Penna. Motor Police, Oxford Valley Barracks, was at the scene, and conducted an investigation.

The Bristol Blood Donors, Bucks County Rescue Squad and the Goodwill Squad, all immediately upon receiving the call, rushed to the scene with their boats and equipment. At the scene the three groups were joined by the Union Fire Company Squad of Morrisville and some employees of the Kings Farm. The five crews dragged the lake, going carefully over every inch of the water area where it was thought the boy had disappeared.

When recovered the body was clothed only in a pair of trousers.

The boy's father was at the scene and when his son's body was pulled ashore he said "Oh, can't you do some-

One Man's Opinion

By WALTER KIERNAN
(I. N. S. Staff Writer)

Our elevator man now is in interstate commerce and entitled to all the rights and privileges thereof, ipso facto and cum laude.

His product is vertical mileage delivered in a gilded cage and he never has been farther than Hoboken on his day off.

But the Supreme Court said that he was in interstate commerce because one of the tenants is in interstate commerce.

That makes him a cross-country traveler in a four foot square shaft and he has renamed the floors New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and South Dakota.

For its law the court turned to the book of proverbs and selected "a man is known by the company he keeps."

The court backed it up with "birds of a feather flock together."

It established that elevator men and exporters are brothers between floors with the safety gate closed.

WHY FEAR VICHY?

After the battle of Waterloo, England returned the French possessions in the West Indies, including Martinique, which had been seized by the British under Lord Nelson. Prodded by his kinsman, the Duc de Morny, Napoleon III sought to establish Maximilian as emperor of Mexico.

When the vain and aging de Lesseps tried to duplicate his Suez success by building a Panama canal, and the financial bubble was punctured by mismanagement and corruption, France had made her last bid for more power in the New World.

Yet even in the present war, after the true nature of the Vichy regime is so clearly revealed that even the most glib can no longer doubt, French power remains at status quo in this hemisphere. Two submarine attacks within three days upon the United States Destroyer Blakeley—one by a whole pack of U-boats—off Martinique does not appear to Americans as merely a coincidence. These Nazi undersea craft are lurking in Martinique waters because they are receiving information and fuel from the Vichy French.

Vichy gave Indo-China to the Japs, thus making possible their recent and present operations against the United Nations in the Far East. Vichy tried to prepare the way for German occupation of Syria, but British and Free French forces forestalled the move. Vichy apparently was ready to give Madagascar to Japan, when the British again intervened.

The United States has seized the Normandie and occupied New Caledonia, the French island group northeast of Australia. Other French possessions in the Pacific are under Free French control. Yet when the Free French seized Saint Pierre and Miquelon on Christmas eve, and the Canadians were thus elated, the Washington State Department protested.

When will the United States permit the British to go ahead at Dakar? When will it seize the considerable merchant shipping as well as the French warships now at Martinique? When will the administration eliminate a possible German landing field in South America by taking over French Guiana?

More to the point, who heads the pro-Vichy element in the American State Department?

BOOM IN CORN

While corn producers are not too happy over the prospect of competition from wheat sold for feed, corn is enjoying an exceptional demand. Consumption of it on the farms and in industry is at a record rate. Farmers are pouring the grain into meat animals and manufacturers are pulling sizeable commodities out of it as never before.

Indeed, the drain on the corn stores is such that the large stock accumulated through the medium of government loans in recent years is gradually disappearing and it is expected that the carry-over at the end of the current crop year will show a drop of 100,000,000 bushels.

The prospective demand is such that a short crop this year might be calamitous. But a crop failure is rare in the corn belt and this year nature seems to be setting the stage for a bumper output.

Laval acts as if he thought he had plenty of rope, but to some observers it seems as though he is nearing the end of his drop.

Random Harvest by JAMES HILTON

CHAPTER NINETEEN

Truslove wrote, reporting progress in his own sphere; transfers of property took time, and it was March before the lawyer could notify him that he no longer possessed any financial interest in the Rainier enterprises. The shares had been sold for seventy shillings (fifteen more than the price at Christmas), and the purchaser had been none other than Chetwynd, who had apparently been glad to add to his own already large holding. Truslove added that he regarded the price as satisfactory, though he still thought the sale unwise in view of a probably much higher price eventually.

Charles wrote back that he was perfectly satisfied, and that if his "unwise" action had been the means of obliging Chet, so much the better. Just about then came the Easter vacation; he did not visit Stourton or see any of the family, but spent the three weeks in an unplanned trip around northern France, visiting Chartres, Lisieux, Caen, and Rouen. Returning to London the day before the Cambridge summer term began, he bought an evening paper at Victoria Station and glanced through what had come to be the almost usual news of famine and revolution somewhere or other on the Continent; not till late at night, in his hotel room, did he happen to notice a headline on the financial page—"Rainier's Still Soaring: Reported Terms of Bonus." He read that the shares had topped five pounds and that there was talk of an issue of new stock to existing shareholders in the proportion of two for one. It wasn't all very clear to him, for he never studied the financial columns and did not understand their jargon; but he realized that from the point of view of immediate profit, Truslove and Chet had been right, and he himself wrong; which did not trouble him at all. He was almost glad for his own sake, as well as Chet's, for he would have had no use for the extra money, whereas Chet enjoyed both spending and the chance to say "I told you so, old chap." In fact he felt so entirely unregretful about what had happened that he sent both Chet and Truslove short notes of congratulation.

The next day he went to Cambridge and completely lost track of financial news amidst the many more interesting pursuits of term time. He still did not make friends easily, but he joined the "Heretics" and sometimes attended the weekly debating sessions over the fish shop in Petty Curry; he also came to know the occupant of the rooms next to his on the same staircase—a high-caste Hindoo named Pal who was a mathematician and perhaps also a genius. Pal claimed to find numerals emotionally and to find them as recognizable as human faces; Charles took him first as an oddity, then as a personality, later as a friend. He formed a habit of having coffee in Pal's rooms once or twice a week.

As summer came, he did most of his reading on the river, generally on the Upper Cam at Grantchester, and sometimes he would portage the canoe across the roadway to the deep tranquil reach beyond the Old Mill. One morning, having done this, he turned to the right, along a tributary; the going was difficult, for he had to slide over sunken logs and push away branches that trailed in the water, but after an arduous yard-by-yard struggle he was suddenly able to paddle into a dark pool overhung with willows; and there, as he rested, a feeling of discovery came over him, as if it were the Congo or the Amazon instead of a little English stream; he felt strangely happy and stayed there all day till it was time to return for tea at the Orchard, which was the Grantchester resort patronized by undergraduates. He was on friendly terms with the old lady there who served strawberries and cream under the apple trees, and when he showed his scratched arms and said where he had been, she answered very casually: "Oh, you must have been up the Bourne—Rupert Brooke used to say how beautiful it was there—he got his arms scratched too." Somehow the whole incident, with its hint of something seen by no human eye between Brooke's and his own (highly unlikely, but tempting to contemplate), gave him a curious pleasure which he felt he would spoil by ever going there again; so he never did.

He got on well with lecturers and tutors, and soon acquired one of those intangible reputations, breathed in whispers across High Tables, that rest on anything except past achievement; he lived interestingly and took hardly any part in University activities, yet it had already become expected that he would do well. Werneth had even consented to his taking the first part of the history tripos in July—after two terms of preparation for an examination for which most students took three, and some even six. "But you have a good background of knowledge," he told Charles, adding with a smile: "And also a good memory."

On an impulse he could not check quickly enough Charles answered: "It's odd you should compliment me on my memory, because—" And then he told Werneth about his war injury, and the strange gap of years which he had christened in his own mind the Dark Corridor.

Werneth listened with an abstract attention beyond the range of mere inquisitiveness. After the brief account was finished, he tore a sheet of paper from a pad on his desk and drew a large rectangle. "Not exactly my province, as a historian, but nevertheless quite a teasing problem, Rainier. Your life, from what you say, appears to be divided into three parts—like Caesar's Gaul?"

"Or like Regent Street," Charles interjected, beginning to be amused. "Or like a Victorian novel," capped Werneth, delightedly.

"Or like an artichoke," recapped Charles.

That put them both in a highly agreeable mood. "Let us call the parts A, B, and C," resumed Werneth, drawing verticals across the rectangle and lettering the segments. "A is your life before the war injury; B is your life between that injury and the moment in Liverpool last December 27 when, according to your statement, you suddenly remembered your name and identity; C is your life since then. Now it is demonstrably true that during Period C—that is to say, at the present time—you enjoy a normally clear recollection of both Period C and Period A, but not of Period B. Am I right?"

"Perfectly."

"And it must also be inferentially clear that during Period B you could not have had any recollection at all of Period A?"

"Naturally not."

"Thank you. . . There's only one thing more I should like to ask—and that is if I might send this diagram to my friend Dr. Freeman, of St. Jude's, along with a brief résumé of the facts which it illustrates?"

When Charles hesitated before replying Werneth added: "I won't mention your name if you'd prefer not."

Charles then consented. The matter was not referred to at his next meeting with Werneth, but some weeks later the history don asked Charles to stay behind after a lecture. "As I expected, my friend Freeman found my notes on your case extremely teasing. In fact he'd very much like to meet you if you haven't any objection. You probably know his reputation as a philosopher and psychologist."

Again Charles was reluctant, and again consented on the understanding that his name was not to be divulged; so the curious meeting took place in Werneth's rooms. The eminent authority talked to Charles for over an hour in a completely detached and anonymous way, stating as his opinion that Period B would probably return, though there could be no certainty about it or prophecy as to the time required. Charles had several further interviews with Freeman, and began to take a certain pleasure in consulting an expert thus obliquely; he thought it typical of the amenities of Cambridge civilization that such a plan could have been worked out to suit him. At the same time he came to like Freeman personally, so that when his own identity became later revealed through an accident, it did not bother him much.

Charles took a First Class in the first part of the history tripos, which was quite a brilliant achievement in the circumstances. After consultations with Bragg and Werneth, he decided to switch over to economics during the following year—an effective piece of specialization, for he had already gone a certain way in economic history. He was increasingly interested in the background of knowledge and theory behind the lives of men, and the astounding clumsiness of world behavior compared with the powers of the planning mind. To use Werneth's favorite word, he found the paradox teasing.

During the Long Vacation he stayed in Cambridge, putting in mornings and evenings of study interspersed with afternoons on the river or walks to Grantchester through the meadows; he liked Cambridge during vacation time—the quieter streets, the air of perpetual Sunday, the August sunlight bleaching the blinds in many a shop that would not pull them up until term time. Most of the bookshelves remained open, however, and there were a few good concerts. The two months passed very quickly.

Sheldon wrote to him every week, but with no news except of domestic trouble at Stourton—an outbreak of petty thefts due (Charles could judge) to Chet's refusal to back up Sheldon in some earlier trouble with one of the gardeners. Now that it was too late, Chet seemed to be handling the matter rather unfortunately, dealing out wholesale dismissals to servants who had given years of service, and leaving a staff both too small and too disgruntled to work well. Chet also wrote, giving his side of the question, casting doubts on Sheldon's efficiency, and asking how Charles, as one of the family, would feel about selling the place. Charles replied instantly that Chet should sell by all means; Stourton was far too big for any modern uses, and family sentiment should not weigh against common sense. Chet did not reply to that, but a few weeks later, at Cambridge, Charles heard from Truslove that Stourton was on the market, but wouldn't be easy to sell "in these days."

Then one Saturday, returning to his rooms from a lecture, he found Kitty sprawled on a sofa and Herne teetering doubtfully in the pantry. "Hello, Uncle Charles," she cried loudly, and then added in a whisper: "That's for his benefit. He didn't believe me—I could see that."

"But why didn't you tell me you were coming?" Charles began, trying to infuse a note of mild pleasure into his astonishment.

"Because you'd probably have told me not to," she answered promptly. He admitted he probably would, and then asked why she had come. "It's my birthday."

"Is it? But—well, many happy returns—but—"

"Uncle Chet promised me a big party at Stourton, but he canceled it at the last moment because he said Aunt Lydia wasn't very well, and as I'd already got leave of absence from Kirby I didn't feel I could waste the week end."

Defenders Like These Papers, Army Men Say

Nothing makes a selective service man in camp happier than a letter from home or a home-town newspaper in the daily mail, army officials said recently after an extensive survey.

Next in order, the selective service youth likes sweets such as candy, cookies and chocolates—and chewing gum!

Officers say that on the march the gum helps keep the boys from drinking too much water and from dipping into their lunch ration.

Other offerings which bring a smile of pleasure to the enrollee include a general repertoire of utilities among which are books of stamps, flashlights, a towel now and then, toilet articles, and reading materials.

Officers say that if relatives want to be sure their addressee gets what's mailed to him, they should address the letter or package in this way: Name first, his company or battery second, his regiment third, and, lastly the name of the post office.

Today's Quiet Moment

(By the Rev. James R. Gally)

Pastor, Bristol Presbyterian Church

Almighty God, who hast called us to worship thee in spirit and in truth, fill our hearts with the presence of thy Holy Spirit, that He might guide us into thy presence. Thou hast promised the Spirit unto all who call upon thee, that they might be comforted in distress, led through hardship, strengthened in trial. Fulfill that promise in our lives, and make of our hearts an acceptable temple for a dwelling place for thy Spirit. In the Name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

"Always In My Heart," which introduces the charming new 15-year-old singing star, Gloria Warren, has been scheduled by the Grand Theatre, where it will open on Sunday. Also starred in the picture are Kay Francis and Walter Huston, with a featured cast that includes Frankie Thomas, Patty Hale, and Borah Minneville and His Rascals, the famed harmonica band.

A heart-warming and delightful story, "Always In My Heart" follows the fortunes of a little family in a small sea coast town. The mother, son and daughter have been struggling along trying to make ends meet. Mother acquires a wealthy suitor, but

John Boles' romantic screen roles have caused him to be regarded as somewhat of an oracle on the subject of love, and it is a singular coincidence that his middle name is actually this fascinating word—John Love Boles. The actor is now appearing on the screen of the Bristol Theatre as the star of "Road to Happiness."

A member of the Three Mesquiteers trio, Tom Tyler may be seen locally in "Outlaws of Cherokee Trail," now showing at the Bristol Theatre. Showing tomorrow is "The Fleet's In."

RITZ THEATRE

Tom Dugan, a five-foot-seven Irishman, portrays—of all people in the world—Adolf Hitler in the new Ernst Lubitsch comedy, "To Be Or Not To Be," now showing at the Ritz Theatre. Just to set the record straight, Dugan doesn't play Hitler as a serious man. Instead, Dugan, as a member of a Polish stock company in the story, merely portrays the dictator in a play they are rehearsing.

FINAL SCORE IS 6 TO 3

Boyle Was Replaced On The Mound by Tony Palumbo

A big first inning in which a quietest of runs were scored enabled the Diamond team to hold its grip on second place in the Bristol Suburban League last night as it defeated the Hunter's outfit, 6-3, on St. Ann's field.

The entire five runs were scored when Boyle was on the hill for the Hunter workers. He was relieved by Tony Palumbo who proved to be a good fireman as he limited the Diamond boys to three hits and a run in five and two-thirds innings he pitched and the run counted against him was the result of a dropped fly in the out-field.

Danny Keegan did the firing for the winners and was only a shell of his former self as he allowed five hits and walked eight batters. Only poor base-running and good fielding save Keegan. In the final inning, the Hunter team loaded the bases but two were out and Keegan fanned Fioravanti to retire the side.

Tony Palumbo and "Jack" McCue led the batters with two out of three hits each.

thing!" He was visibly affected and urged the bystanders to endeavor to do something to revive his son and restore his life. It was then that the rescue groups, although confident efforts to restore life would meet with failure put forth herculean efforts but without success.

The Goodwill Rescue Squad has just been organized and answered their first call last night. They recently purchased a new boat and other equipment to be used in recovering bodies from the water.

The boy had been swimming but it is believed that perhaps he got caught on one of several ledges which are known to exist in the lake, which was formerly a sand pit of the Curtis & Hill Co. The water depth in some places is said to be 40 feet. A large crowd of spectators watched the grappling crews drag for the body.

Washington Crossing's History is Presented

strategic was that crossing than the famed one later that we hear so much of," she added.

Incidents leading up to the decision of Washington that his next move must be a surprise one were recounted. "He insisted on a possible chance of survival," continued the speaker who recalled that Washington realized the low ebb of conditions when he wrote in a letter in mid-December that year that "The game is almost up."

Washington's command to his generals to cross on the night of the 24th to surprise the British garrisoned at Trenton, was not followed out completely, the audience was reminded, as one general failed to start on the trip across the ice-filled Delaware and two who did start turned back. "The courageous decision of Washington to cross was of more significance than the crossing itself." The muskets became so wet in the sleet that they could not be fired. And in answer to word to this effect Washington sent the message back along the line, "Tell the general to use the bayonets." This in the face of the fact that only one man in five had a bayonet!

"But I like to think that that was the turning point in the war," added Mrs. Hutton. She then reminded that just as in those days so at present even little acts of encouragement can so bolster morale of those who need it. "A lack of criticism of what isn't done well will be an aid to our cause, and to our forces in the present war," she added as she reminded that Washington found criticism in his path just as the leaders do in the present emergency. "Washington crossed much more than a river. It was a decisive mental victory that he had. And it brought assurance to the people who were not backing him up by fire and sympathy." In conclusion she expressed the hope that Washington Crossing Park "will not only have for us a historical interest, but inspiration and hope in ultimate victory in today's conflict."

Mrs. Hutton was presented to the gathering by Mrs. Earl H. Tomb, who also announced the other number for the afternoon.

The women gathered, by popular vote, decided the winners in five classes of floral arrangements; the winners of awards being: Arrangement in pair of containers, 1st, Mrs. Griffith L. Williams; 2nd, Mrs. Earl Tomb; in novelty container, 1st, Mrs. Theodore B. Megargee; 2nd, Mrs. Frank Lehman; red, white and blue arrangement, 1st, Mrs. Russell W. DeLong; 2nd, Mrs. Lehman; arrangement of roses, 1st, Mrs. Williams; 2nd, Mrs. Lehman; miscellaneous arrangement, Mrs. Megargee; 2nd, Mrs. Andrew MacArthur.

In the absence of Mrs. Walter Pitzonka, Mrs. George E. Boswell presented a calendar for planting, pruning, spraying, etc., of plants, shrubs and trees. Mrs. Elwood Goslin reviewed an article in which a variety of preservatives for cut flowers were listed. Natural color slides were shown by Mrs. Harry Neher, these being of wild flowers taken by Mr. Neher at Bowman's Hill, and some in the state of Colorado.

dancer." Asking for combined strength against the common enemy, General Martin declared:

"We cannot unite through the class hatreds that have been encouraged by the New Deal. Any man who tries to stir up class hatred at this dangerous time is not an American. The way to victory is through the time-honored way of free enterprise.

"The wrath of the people," the former commander of the 28th division said, is rising against racketeers and dictators in politics, business, industry, agriculture and labor. It blazes against officials, legislators and courts which permit or encourage these sins against the public.

"These sins destroy initiative in industry, they cut the throat of labor, they endanger our schools, or homes and our religion," Martin continued. "They violate the bill of rights. If they are not checked, they will lead to national disaster."

The Capitol View and Union fire companies extinguished the flames after a hard battle.
